A GRAND OPENING!

A SPLENDID BANGOR AUDIENCE!

LARGE ATTENDANCE OF LADIES!

ENTHUSIASTIC RECEPTION OF GEN. CONNOR!

Speeches by Gen. Connor and Senator Morton!

MUSIC BY THE CORNET BAND, ETC.!

RAISING THE BANNER.

At 7 o'clock last evening a large number of people gathered in West Market square to witness the first flag raising of the campaign. After several selections had been played by the Bangor Cornet Band, the splendid National Flag under which we won the glorious victory of 1872, was thrown to the breeze from the line extending from Wheelwright, Clark & Co's block. Inscribed with the name of SELDEN CONNOR the gallant standard-bearer of the Republican ticket of Maine. As the flag was unfurled the band played the stirring strains of The Star Spangled Banner, and after a rousing cheer, the crowd proceeded to Norombega Hall to attend the first

GRAND REPUBLICAN RALLY.

By half-past 7 the hall was well filled by an audience representing the wealth, influence, industry, sobriety and intelligence of Bangor, and by 8 o'clock the floor, platform and galleries were densely thronged by one of the finest assemblies ever witnessed in one city. The very large attendance of ladies was a grateful and notable feature of the occasion, and added its special charm to a demonstration which was in all respects a grand success.

BANGOR'S WELCOME TO THE GALLANT CONNOR.

At a few minutes before 8 o'clock the Chairman of the meeting, Edward B. Nealley, Esq., President of the Fourth District Republican Club accompanied by Hon. J. S. Wheelwright and other prominent citizens, ascended the platform, escorting Gen. Connor, who walked up the steps with the aid of his crutches. As the General appeared the Cornet Band struck up the familiar strains of "Marching through Georgia," and when the audience caught sight of the gallant soldier a perfect storm of applause shook the house, drowning the music of the band and gathering in volume until the audience rose to their feet and rang out three rousing, enthusiastic cheers for the heroic soldier and cultured gentleman who stood with modest dignity before them. The ladies joined most heartily in the ovation and from one of the galleries an elegant bouquet was thrown at the General's feet. It was a welcome worthy of loyal, whole-souled Bangor, and one which could not fail to go straight to the heart of its recipient.

GENERAL CONNOR'S SPEECH.

When the applause had partially lulled Mr. Nealley addressed the audience in a very felicitous manner, paying a most eloquent tribute to the loyalty, fidelity, patriotic endurance and personal worth of Gen. Connor, whom he gracefully introduced to the people of Bangor. On laying aside his crutches and taking his stand on the front of the platform, the hero of the occasion was again greeted by long-continued applause, which only ceased at the sound of his clear and musical voice as he acknowledged the compliment paid him. He said substantially:

I do not come before you as one qualified or entitled to give instruction in Republican principles. I am here in recognition of the justice of the appeal to him whom you have generously designated as the standard bearer of the Republican party of Maine to declare his position on the questions before the people. The immediate issue before you is whether a Republican or a Democrat shall be chosen Governor of Maine. That question is, in view of the approaching Presidential election, one of national importance. Its decision will indicate the views of the people upon State rights, currency and administrative reform, and will show whether they intend to entrust the government to the faithful Republican party, a party of settled policy, of pre-eminent patriotism in its favor, or to the Democratic party, which has no presumption in its favor, and whose policy is blind, vague and unformed. On the one hand there is a moral certainty of good government on the other hand an absolute uncertainty. The decision of this question is of pre-eminent importance to the people of Maine.

After indorsing the position of the Republican party on national topics, General Connor spoke of the importance of our school system, the boast of New England, and of the necessity of preserving from evil that which gives us educated labor and industry. By prohibition, he said that the people of Maine had long been determined to say press the liquor traffic, and to that determination they still adhere. Prohibition of the only method both in efficiency and consistent. Likewise is a protection to society and an ally to temperance, is a delusion and a snare.

He welcomed all evidences of a renewal of fraternal feeling on the part of the people of the reconstructed States, and regarded such evidences as proofs of the wisdom and justice which had marked the general course of the National Government. The Republican party had not only suppressed rebellion and conquered a peace, but by a firm and honorable policy it had made the restoration of harmony possible. He would welcome such a reconcilion, on the basis of the grand doctrines now incorporated in our fundamental laws, not simply with a selfish view of the advantages to the Union, but in revival of the bond of sympathy with country men. He would be glad to see New England as cordially united with South Carolina and Virginia in carrying out the mission of our Republic as Maine and Massachusetts. The party which has done so much toward rearranging this mission was certainly best be trusted to complete the glorious work.

General Connor concluded his remarks as follows:

"When the hour of the dissolution of the great party of the Union shall come, it is not be succeeded by the party which was indignantly deposed by a betrayed people, and has continued to maintain its organizations by a cautious opposition, but by some party bearing the freshness and promise of youth, which, rallying around a principle, has grown great by its attractive force."

The above is but an inadequate sketch of the remarks which occupied about half an hour, and our hasty abstract lacks the elegance of diction the convincing force of statement and the comprehensive grasp of the great issues of the hour, which characterized the General's address. Its elevation of tone, its freedom from any of that personal and petty spirit manifested by our opponents, and the manly and manliness of its utterance made a deep impression upon the audience, who could read in the intelligent, noble countenance and clear, honest eyes of the speaker that the elevated sentiments he uttered were in keeping with the character and bearing of the man. At the close of his remarks the General was again greeted with the most hearty demonstrations of applause.

SENATOR MORTON INTRODUCED.

After some excellent music by the band the chairman called on Senator Hamlin who was greeted with the cordial manifestations of regard which he always receives from his fellow-citizens, but in a few well-chosen words he assured them that he had not risen to make a speech but to introduce to them his distinguished colleague in the United States Senate, Hon. Oliver P. Morton, of Indiana. His reference to the inestimable services rendered the Union cause by the War Governor of Indiana, elicited rounds of applause, and he paid a high tribute to the great abilities which have rendered Mr. Morton famous as a Senator. On taking a seat near the front of the platform the distinguished Senator was given a greeting which must have reminded him of his Western home, and began in a low but clear voice an address which for breadth of treatment, fullness of sentiment, power of logic and fluency of style, has rarely if ever been equalled in this city. We should be glad to give the speech entire, as it is worthy of careful study by every earnest citizen but the time at our command will prevent giving more than the merest outline of the remarks, which we hope to present more fully hereafter.

He expressed great pleasure in meeting the people of Maine, playing a high compliment to the State and to Bangor. Speaking of the late Centennial he said the Senator who has honored it by his eminent services. He referred to the distance between his State and ours, and the ties of common interest which not the less bind us together. And the Northwest is greatly indebted to New England for the population many of the best institutions, notably the free school system, now for the first time in danger. He expressed his pleasure in meeting the gallant standard-bearer of the Republican party, a man whose name is spoke louder than any words, and who certainly had earned the confidence of his fellow-citizens. He should not discuss our purely local or personal issues, but call attention to the wider field of interest upon which the example of Maine would wield so powerful an influence. It was certain that one of the two existing parties would control this Government for the next few years, and while some might not be fully in accord with either, new parties are not created to order, and the intelligent citizen must choose between the two now before the people.

He then sketched in masterly style the origin and distinctive principle of the Democratic party, which holds to the sovereignty of the States to-day as firmly as in 1798. The Democrats have ever held that the Union is a confederacy or treaty between States as sovereign and independent as France and Austria. That doctrine came to be the bulwark and supporter of human slavery and finally rendered possible rebellion a terrible reality. That party undertribute pleas of State rights had legislated, plotted and fought to perpetuate Slavery, and while happily the restoration of human bondage is now beyond their power, the spirit of the old autocracy remains with that party to-day and its false theories with regard to equal rights and human labor are still the ruling impulses of the Democracy.

The Republican party was called into existence to oppose slavery and to champion the National idea of the Declaration of Independence that all men are created equal, and entitled to the protection of a government founded on the will of the people. Favored by a benign Providence it had destroyed slavery in spite of the efforts of the Democracy, and established in place of the State Rights dogmas the National idea of a free, united and just popular government. It is true that thousands of Democrats fought bravely for the Union, but they fought against the influence and efforts of their party, and the party has not purged itself of its influence.

Between these two parties—that which fought to save the Union and the principles of a true nationality, and that which fought to destroy it and to establish the doctrine that even a State carved out of the public domain and called into existence by act of Congress, may annihilate the authority of the Constitution—the choice must be between those two parts is the people of Maine are called upon to decide, with a full knowledge that the contest in this State will exert a powerful influence upon the National contest of 1876. A vote for Connor is a vote for Republican triumph in the National campaign; a vote for his opponents is a vote for Democratic success in the National arena.

The Democrats object to references to the rebellion in considering the issues of the present and future, but the people should understand what the clamor for obliterating all distinctions means. It means that distinctions in law as well as in politics are to be done away with, that the Northern Democracy have no fixed policy upon any prominent issue, but the Democrats of the South have a policy, upon which they are solidly united, and which they will surely enforce if the party ever attains to power. The speaker asked if it was reasonable to believe that when in control of the whole government the Southern Democrats would consent to levy taxes upon themselves to pens on Union soldiers and pay the Union debt, while the soldiers of the Confederacy and the losses of the South received no compensation. And the Northern Democracy are logically committed over and again to supporting Southern claims, even for payment for emancipated slaves, the bulk of which have been carefully made out and the evidences collected and preserved. If any public authority, national, State or local, takes away any man's property without authority of law his claim to recompense is indisputable. The Constitutional Amendment does not bind the Democratic policy, as that party has everywhere declared and denounced emancipation unconstitutional, and if Slave property was confiscated without authority of law they would be bound to concede claims for compensation. That party could not escape from its position on this subject and once in power its dominant Southern wing would insist upon its recognition. By their doctrine that all distinctions between Union and rebel soldiers should be wiped out they are pledged to place them upon equal footing on the pension rolls, and by their constitutional theories they are pledged to reimburse rebels as well as Union men for losses incurred by war.

The speaker next alluded to the oppressive laws to which the freedmen would be subjected under Democratic State rule, no longer restrained by any National authority. The Democrats ridiculed any allusion to the horrible outrages which had been perpetrated, as "shaking the bloody shirt," just as they ridiculed the persecutions and massacres of an earlier day by shouting "Bleeding Kansas." But the terrible evidence obtained from men of both parties could not be thrust away, and thinking men will know that with a Democrat in the place of a Republican President the civil and political rights of the negroes of the South would be practically trampled out. The South is just now on its good behavior, hoping to gain control by peaceful means, but when there is choice for any political position the credentials demanded are service in aid of the rebel lost Not only are there three times as many rebel soldiers in the next House as from the Union armies, but they are also in the National Senate, and there is not a Democratic Senator to-day who will acknowledge the legality of the Constitutional Amendments. I have been plainly told that they will not stop to repeal them but will let die over them as the North rode over the fugitive slave law.

The Senator next discussed the currency question, giving an elaborate history of the origin and course of our financial legislation during the war and since. He said the opening of the last Congress found great diversities of public opinion as to the policy to be pursued, and the currency bill was finally framed as the best measure attainable under the circumstances. Its first provision was for the resumption of specie payments on January 1st, 1879. In the meantime the volume of the currency was neither to be expanded nor contracted. It was necessarily a measure which involved concessions, but it named the day for resumption, sufficiently distant to prevent disturbance of values, and it was believed that long before the date arrived a greenback would be appreciated torpe. Finally the measure of a Republican Congress, and that pledge of specie payments the Democrats of Ohio are proposing to repeal. He cited the demand of Pendleton, McDonald and others for an unlimited issue of greenbacks without any redemption feature and for substituting Treasury promises to pay at no definite time for the National bank-note circulation now secured by the deposit of Government bonds of specie character and limited amounts. The Democrats of Minnesota and some other States have pledged to favor specie payments are still very anxious for the success of Allen and the repudiation ticket in Ohio, and Democratic encouragement here would be exulting used in the Ohio canvass.

In conclusion the Senator said: Understand the position of that party. It boasts it has not changed. I say it has not changed. It is the same in principle as before the war and during the war. It was the protector of slavery, and now stands as a mourner at its grave. It cannot accept the equality of the negro. It is in favor of putting the Confederate leaders in the same position as the National ones.

Your election is important as the precursor of what may happen next year. The soldiers of Maine endured the toilsome march or mingled their blood with the soldiers of any own State, and now it is not time in peace what we had gained in war. Next year is to be the centennial of American Independence, and its celebration will be especially grateful to the Republican party, which can boast that it stands upon the platform of independence built by our fathers in 1776.

The above sketch will convey but an imperfect idea of the thorough and lucid treatment of every point by the speaker, whose facility of expression and easy but sincere manner gave added force to its arguments. The address was upon a high plane, having no touch of the electioneering harangue of a stump speaker, but dealing seriously and in a statesmanlike manner with great questions affecting the welfare of the whole country. The Senator commanded the earnest attention of one of the finest audiences ever gathered in Bangor, and when he closed the applause deepened into cheers which made the walls of Norombega echo again.

Many of the ladies and gentlemen present ascended the platform and extended their congratulations to the distinguished speakers, and the vast audience dispersed full of enthusiasm, proud of our noble candidate for Governor and more than satisfied with the grand success of the opening rally of the Republican campaign in Bangor. The good work has begun right nobly; now let us push on the columns until victory is ours again!

The financial question may be broadly stated as follows:—suppose an individual runs in debt, but had credit, which would be better for him; to economize and get out of debt, or take advantage of his credit and go in deeper? The first is the Republican, the second the Democratic position in Ohio. The Democratic proposition embraces also the folly of a debtor proposing to borrow more largely from his creditors for the expressed reason that he is unable to pay what he already owes.—Cincinnati Commercial.

Speaking of the success with which foreign manufactures have been introduced into Japan an exchange remarks that many counterfeits are put upon the market, "the commercial morality of Japan not being at or enough to prevent such frauds." In this country commercial morality is uncommonly high, and domestic goods with foreign brands are never seen.

A refreshing dissipation for the Democratic editor during the coming autumn evenings, will be to turn, over the back files and mournfully erase the epithets, nicknames, and perpetual ridiculous with which he was wont to ornament the mention of the Hon. Benjamin F. Butler of Massachusetts and the Hon. W. D. Kelley of Pennsylvania.—St. Louis Globe.

London despatch says: No telegraphic line has yet reached this city that Rapoli has refused to the demands of the U. S. for satisfaction for the insult to the American Consul.

The Boston correspondent of the Graphic declares that the Massachusetts Democrats have not sufficient strength to elect a straight ticket, and if they put one in the field, even with Gaston at its head, their defeat is a certainty. Hence he advises "the old hacks of the party," as he politely terms them, to put up a mixed ticket.

A LONG ISLAND LAND FRAUD. A case of real estate swindling, owing to the success of which a poor German has been rendered almost penniless, was brought to light in one of the Brooklyn courts a few days ago. About twenty years ago the father of Alderman Clancy purchased some lots of land at Winfield, Long Island, which were not long ago sold to a German named Windmuller, by Thomas Murphy, a real estate agent, representing himself as having been authorized by Mr. Clancy to dispose of the property. Without demanding a deed from Murphy, Windmuller proceeded to erect stables and a brick house on the land, and had no sooner entered into complete possession of the place than Mr. Clancy appeared and informed him that he was on his property without any legal right. The case was tried before Judge Pepper, when it was shown that Murphy was never authorized by Mr. Clancy to sell the property, and that he had barefacedly swindled Windmuller in the pretended sale. On the strength of these facts a verdict was rendered for Mr. Clancy, and Windmuller loses about $3000 by the operation.

Trouble among the Democratic reformers of New York! The Albany Times (Dem.) says: "It would greatly promote harmony in the election of delegates to the Syracuse Convention if Governor Tilden would give some public assurance that it is not intended by his personal followers to use that Convention, if they can control it, to elect a delegation in his interest to the National Convention of '76."

While General Sherman was recently in Omaha a lieutenant in the Second Iowa Infantry introduced himself to the General as one of his old soldiers. "Oh, oh! Gen. Curtis, old regiment. I'm glad to meet you," said the General, heartily. "Then you were with us down in Georgia, where the soldiers starved on a hardtack, pieces a day," as one of my old regimental whom I met on the west platform of a railway car in Ohio recently expressed it."

The Post Office Department has arranged for a fast mail train between New York and the West, to consist of but ing but the locomotive and a mail car. The time between New York and Chicago is thus reduced to twenty-six hours. Now the New York papers reach Chicago readers before breakfast on the day after the day of publication. St. Louis is growling in envious rage.

NATIONAL TEMPERANCE CAMP-MEETING.

A series of very interesting impromptu meetings—The last day's proceedings

Old Orchard Aug. 26. After the reporters had left the ground last evening a vote was passed to adjourn the meeting, but this morning when two special trains, one of 15 cars from Lowell and Lawrence and one of the Grand Trunk Railway of 12 cars, arrived at the beach bearing expectant crowds it was determined to improvise a meeting. The result was an assemblage of nearly 1 000 persons. M G Palmer presided at both the forenoon and afternoon meetings. At the former Rev. J I Day of Biddeford, read the Scriptures and offered prayer. Hon F. Benson, of Yarmouth, and Owen Chadbourne, of Saco made able speeches. Mrs. L. C. Partington spoke with characteristic vigor At 1 o'clock the social temperance prayer meeting was led by J M. Robinson, of the Gardiner Reform Club. The service was as interesting as those of the days previous. Fifteen hundred people assembled at the afternoon meeting. Rev Sereno Elliot led in prayer and Scripture reading, and after words made a brief address. The other speakers were M. G Palmer, Mrs. Partington, Captain H. H. Burbank, of Limerick, and A M. Drew, of Washington—the latter of whom gave interesting recollections of men famous in public life, whose lives had been blighted and brought to an untimely end by the curse of drink. Owen S. Chadbourne, of Saco and a number of gentlemen in the audience made brief remarks. These impromptu speeches ended the last and liveliest session of the temperance folks. Their gathering as a whole has been successful, but prolonged beyond the point of general interest.

FROM ROCKLAND.

Visiting Knights Templar.

Rockland, Aug. 26. Lewiston Commandery Knights Templar arrived from Mt. Desert by the steamer Lewiston about 6 o'clock and were met by Claremont Commandery of this city. After a street parade they were escorted to the armory where a banquet was served to the visiting Sir knights. The Commanderies made a fine display. Several ladies accompanying the Lewiston Knights were given a supper at the Thorndike House and at eight o'clock were given a reception in the Hotel Parlors by the ladies of the Rockland Sir Knights. At 10 o'clock the Proprietors of the Thorndike House gave the visiting and Rockland ladies a nice collation with ice cream, fruits etc. in profusion. About 11 o'clock the party took a special train home.

GYP TIE.

BY CLARA D. BOLLIVER.

A very small boy was little Gyp Tie,
With a dusky face and as almond eye,
A voice small voice, most silvery sweet,
And the tiniest pair of noiseless feet
That ever could ever wish to meet

A very hard lot had little Gyp Tie,
Though his innocent face was never awry,
He washed up the dishes, and did the sboregs,
He blackened the stoves, and scrubbed the floors,
And he never listened behind the doors

He sang at his work did little Gyp Tie,
A sorrowful song that he wished to die,
And go to the bright Celestial Land,
An angel there with his mates to stand,
With "clown" on his head, and "hoop" in his hand

We grew very fond of little Gyp Tie,
He knew was known to cheat or lie,
He went to church, and he learned to read,
And he prayed so hard, that we all agreed
That he was a rescued "brand" indeed

He felt very sad, did little Gyp Tie,
And he wiped a tear from his almond eye,
And he sang his sorrowful song all day,
When the silver spoons were stolen away
From the secret drawer where they always lay

But sad as he yet was little Gyp Tie,
When he hailed the big policeman nigh
He looked at Gyp as a child of sin,
And he called his heart and prayers "no thin,"
And he pulled out the spoons with a mournful grin
From the folds of that blouse, sorted sadly in

We want no more like little Gyp Tie
We thank of his prayers with a dreadful sigh
And his sorrowful song that was all of "Gooby"
But we want a youth to scrub and to wash,
With what the proboscis terms "moral" "Scribner for September

A STORY OF CRANBORNE CHASE.

[From "All the Year Round."]

(Concluded.)

Rushmere Walk was one of the most favorite haunts of the Cranborne deer; being full of coverts and lurking-places and full of leafy hollows which is the deer's favorite food. The scattered woodlands and copses abounded in hazel and young beech, and the fern grew thicker on the slopes and round the lodges than in any other part of the old forest. It was about five o'clock and very hot, and George Bull thought it might be as well to go and get a cup of tea at a friend's close by, before starting on a four or five hours' search. The lights burned back towards Woodgates when I rising glowed over the covert from some high ground that commanded a view. I hoped to get back in this way to the right towards Brook Copse hedgerow, when he saw two men walking slowly up the side of it and one as far as he could distinguish at such a distance, had a gun over his arm. With no longing for the opposite George at once stripped for work, threw off his shooting-jacket, hung it on a bough the position of which he noted, and started off in pursuit. There was a great prize to win, whatever the risk might be. He hollow of the two figures as long as I could see them till at last they both issued through a gap into a tall thick [illegible]. Right across the fallow shimmered the [illegible] a moment as in the grip of heat-haze to the hazels within two [illegible] almost indeed a man who was [illegible] upright smoking a pipe and with both hands in his pockets. Ah! thought George to himself, has [illegible] seeing here to screen the other, and [illegible] Black Jack, I feel sure, and I don't think I will if I can keep me both [illegible] together. So [illegible] and [illegible] something suddenly he passed through the gap by the side [illegible] no notice. I thought [illegible]

When George emerged into the light he got into the stubble field there was [illegible] I suppose of the man with the gun, but he [illegible] across the field, and presently at a corner of a copse, he caught sight of the one stopping [illegible] a hedge at about four hundred yards ahead and [illegible] he saw George he rose up and push [illegible] a brisk walk. Now there happened to be a sheep-fold in that field, and this were several lines of hurdle-running across the very path he had to go. These at last George had to climb over, but the delay [illegible] the keeper [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]
